Newly-Appointed Deputy Stretches Drag-Net to Ensnare Bootleggers

Bootleggers had been "making a race track" of the road through his farm for a long time, according to Isaac Barringer, Isoline. There didn't seem to be any way to stop them, either, for Cumberland county officers could not locate the still and officers of Overton, county, where it was supposed to be located, apparently would not try to apprehend the stillers.

But last week Sheriff Henry made Jim Woody one of his deputies, and Mr. Barringer and the newly-appointed deputy immediately decided to spread a literal dragnet and ensnare the leggers.

Accordingly, a few nights ago, he stretched a two-inch cable across the road shortly before the leggers were due to pass. Then he and one or two assistants hid in the bushes near the road to await the law violators. They had waited only a short time when a wagon drawn by two mules was seen approaching down the lane. The moonlight dimly revealed in it the forms of two men.

They drew near, conversing in low tones, and when they came alongside Mr. Barringer one of the men remarked:

"Shucks, I'd rather have this gallon of whiskey than those two 'shots' there."

Then, just as they were about to pass the deputy stepped out and quietly said:

"Hold on there, boys. Let's see what you have there."

They didn't pause to parley the matter, but one of the men lashed the mules into a run and the other rose up in the wagon and hurled something over the fence into an adjoining field—it didn't splinter into a thousand pieces, however, but hit against a tree and fell to the ground with a "plop" which immediately told the officers that the article was not a fruit jar.

Then someone yelled, "Look out, there's a rope." But before the leggers could do anything to check the racing team, they struck the cable, and wagon, mules and law violators were in such a hopeless mess that it finally became necessary to cut the rope to extricate them.

After the law violators, whom the officers found to be Floyd and Morris Cox, had been made securer, the officers investigated the mysterious object the legger had hurled from him when the officers first appeared. They found at the foot of the tree a rubber bag filled with pure "mountain dew". These progressive bootleggers had apparently discarded the fruit jar in favor of the rubber bag, the latter being less fragile and more inconspicuous.

The bootleggers were brought to town and tried before Esq. O. B. Rector, who bound them to circuit court in $250. bond and to federal court in $1,000 bond.

Mr. Erwin will be remembered by some of our oldest citizens as having lived here when a boy. The family lived in the house now owned by John Warner. Mr. Erwin finds many changes since he was last here. So changed is the town that he would not have known Crossville. He is much pleased with the prospects for the future of Crossville and Cumberland county, as is Mr. Baxter also. They are carpenters and farmers and are considering securing small farms and developing them.

RESTRAINING ORDER DENIED; SHERIFF HENRY LEGAL OFFICER

Attorney C. E. Keyes, on behalf of G. W. Walker, had a petition presented to Judge Xen N. Hicks, Roane county, last week seeking to restrain Sheriff J. H. Henry from acting as sheriff and retaining G. W. Walker as the lawful sheriff of this county until the hearing that is set for October of Walker that the election in which he was defeated by Henry, was illegally held be determined at the October term of circuit court. Judge Hicks declined to grant the injunction and Sheriff Henry will continue to serve such papers as may come within the scope of his authority.

It is understood that Mr. Walker will not vacate the jail until after the hearing of his contest in October. Some persons have expressed surprise that legal action has not been taken to remove Walker from the jail, but we are reliably informed that no results from any action could be obtained sooner than the October term of court and for that reason he matter is allowed to rest.

The position is a peculiar one to say the least. J. H. Henry is the acting sheriff and all prisoners are supposed to be under his control. Yet former sheriff Walker continues to occupy the jail and seems to be in full control of the prisoners just as he was before Sheriff Henry was inducted into office. Should prisoners make their escape, as they have frequently done, it would seem to be something of a question as to which of the men would be liable.

The Art Circle will meet with Mrs. Susie Dunbar, Friday afternoon.
